CORRECT YOUR HISTORY, MR. BRYAN.

When Mr. Bryan, of Nebraska, was making that free silver, catiline speech in the House of Representatives, of which as unfortunate in his history as he was in his logic, his morals and his political economy. To give the President a lesson in the line of conduct he should pursue he had the following to say: 'Muchlback relates an incident in the of the great military hero of France. Marengo the Man of Destiny, sad and disheartened, thought the battle lost. to beat a retreat. The lad replied: I do not know how. Dessaix has never taught me retreat, but I can beat a charge. Oh, I can beat a charge that would make the dead fall into line! I beat that charge at the Bridge of Lodi; I beat it at Mt. Tabor; I beat it at the

"The charge was ordered, the battle won and Marengo was added to the victories of Napoleon. Oh, let our gallant leader draw inspiration from the street gamin

And if Mr. Cleveland is to be Napoleon we suppose Mr. Bryan is to be the gamin?

But let The Times tell you, Mr. Bryan, that nothing of the sort ever happened at Marengo. You have had some cheap fustian literature imposed upon you, Mr. Bryan. That word "Sire"ought to have told you it was a counterfeit. Napoleon was First Consul of a Republic when Marenge was fought, and it would have been treason to address him as "Sire." In point of fact, that address for him was determined on four years afterwards when he was made Emperor. Whilst he was First Consul he was addressed elther as 'Citizen Consul' or as "Gene-

Further, Mr. Bryan, if you had ever seen a battle you would know that when people tell about drummer boys talking to the commander of the army on the battle field in that way they are simply making idiots of themselves.

But in point of fact, Napoleon did not order Dessaix's division to retreat, and never had a thought of ordering it to do so. Dessaix's division got up to the field of battle about 2 o'clock P. M. when the fight was in a bad state for the French. As soon as it could be put into position it was sent forward, attacked the Austrians with great vigor and, through a co-operating charge on the flank by Kellerman just in the nick of time, it drove them in a rout from the field, and there is the whole story, Mr. Bryan.

WILL THE ACT BE REPEALED?

We are constantly asked if the Sherman act will be repealed? If our answer were governed by what appears to be the relative strength of parties in the Senate at this time, we should be compelled to reply that repeal would be defeated in that body. Nevertheless we believe that it will be unconditionally re pealed, and that, too, within a reasonable

The House will vote on the repeal bill next Monday. It votes first on a proposition to make coinage free at sixteen to one; then, if that fails, at seventeen to one, and so on to twenty to one. If all fail it votes directly on the proposition to repeal the act out and out. There have been so many defections ongst the free silverites from the ratio of sixteen to one, that it is safe to prediet that propositions will not pass. The enemies of free silver have had no fear of the propositions intervening between sixteen to one and twenty to one. That last has seemed the most danaway from repeal even a considerable NORFOLK'S GUESTS. body of those disposed to find common ground of compromise. But Secretary Carlisle's letter to Senator Voor nes, showing that it would cost the gov dollars to recoin the silver we now have probably will, lay the twenty to one proposition entirely at rest. With the ratio at twenty to one silver would have to sell at $1.03 per ounce for the silver purchasing power. Silver is now worth about seventy-three cents an ounce. Free coinage would therefore have to raise it thirty cents an ounce for the establishment of the new ratio to produce any sort of practical effect. For, if it did not raise the silver dollar to a point that would restore parity in value between the

That it would produce a rise temporaa fact which gives the coup de grace to Veils are still worn about the same gathered on the brim of the hat all around, so that they will fall grace fully and loosely in front. A Parasian around, so that they will laid gran-fully and loosely in front. A Parasian oddity is an old-fashioned veil hanging long in front; the embroidered ends are brought up at the side and fall there almost hiding the face; then they are fastened at the bust.

In this matter of hat flouncing and vells, the very young girl has decidedly the most liberty. She may trim her hat almost as she pleases, and the trimming may droop over her face to great extent and excite no comment. She may wear that exerts no comment. She may wear the biggest of big bonnets or the queerest of pokes, and will be vetoed always charming. A few years added to her and she would be eccentric, odd or received. odd or peculiar. But so long as th youthful bloom is en her cheek no one could dream of objecting.

This maiden wears a finely shaded mouslin hat, with a big flounce that falls softly all around. At the front she has a bow, partly mouslin and partly velvet, that stands gally over the Her cape, too is on the simple order falling from a yoke of white embroidery and absinth color cloth alternated; a big ruche of green joins the yoke and the cape which is also of the delicate green shade. A knot of black velvet loops catches the fronts.

Mr. J. C.
